2. MAIN RESEARCH INTERESTS

All my research has been preoccupied with understanding the forms of power in capitalism, with a particular interest around the nexus between material and symbolic power. Empirical work which investigates these larger tendencies is focused on three areas of global political economy: (1) trade (WTO; NGOs and trade policy); (2) finance (City of London institutional politics); and (3) ideology (neoliberalism, the politics of managerialism). My disciplinary location is within international political economy and international political sociology.

5. PUBLICATIONS

Books

Keywords for Today: A 21st Century Vocabulary (Oxford University Press, 2018). [Part of a collective writing project, lead editors Colin MacCabe and Holly Yanacek].

Neoliberalism: The Key Concepts (Abingdon: Routledge, 2016).

- 'In the tradition of Raymond Williams' Keywords, Eagleton-Pierce provides an indispensable guide to decoding the lexicon of neoliberal political-speak. Scholars will find the etymologies highly suggestive, enabling them to contextualize and nuance their analyses of the evolving dynamics of neoliberalism' – Nik Theodore, University of Illinois at Chicago.
- 'Since 2008, and the government bailouts that followed the financial crisis, there has been a flood of interest in neoliberalism. Eagleton-Pierce has done a sterling job in identifying the core themes and concepts and putting them into an accessible and readable volume. Highly recommended' – Ray Kiely, Queen Mary University of London.

Symbolic Power in the World Trade Organization (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2013).

- 'a breath of fresh air in a notoriously dry, overly orthodox and all-too-often unimaginative field. Critical, innovative and persuasive throughout, this is the book we should all be reading and a standard by which we should judge future works on the WTO' – Rorden Wilkinson, Professor of International Political Economy and Pro-Vice-Chancellor Education at University of New South Wales.
- 'a deft adaptation and innovative extension of Bourdieu's theory of classification struggles to probe the ordinary workings and submerged politics of multilateral negotiations on the global scene' – Loïc Wacquant, Professor of Sociology, University of California at Berkeley.

University of Exeter Teaching Nomination for 'Best Lecturer' (2013).

10. TEACHING

I have a wide range of teaching experience at undergraduate (all years) and postgraduate (taught and research) levels, including acting as a course convener and designing new modules. Degrees and modules I have designed and taught include the following:

SOAS University of London (2013-):

- New Undergraduate Programme (2021-22 launch): 'Politics, Philosophy, and Economics' (cross-departmental collaboration, part of the core team leading the design of the degree and module delivery).
- 'The Politics of the World Economy' (undergraduate core, new module).
- 'Key Debates on Neoliberalism' (undergraduate option, new module).
- 'Globalisation and Global Governance' (undergraduate option).
- 'The International Organisation of World Politics' (undergraduate option).
- 'International Political Economy' (postgraduate taught option, new module).
- 'Politics of Globalization and Development' (postgraduate taught option).
- 'MPhil Research Methods' (postgraduate research core).
- 'MPhil Upgrade Workshop' (postgraduate research core).
- Summer School: (1) 'The Politics of Global Capitalism' (new course); (2) 'Capitalism, Crisis, and the Neoliberal State' (co-taught with Fayzi Ismail) (new course).

University of Exeter (2011-13):

- 'Contemporary Theories of World Politics' (undergraduate core).
- 'Political Economy of International Trade' (undergraduate option, new module).
- 'International Political Economy' (postgraduate option).
- 'Global Security' (postgraduate option).
- 'Research Methods' (undergraduate and postgraduate core).

London School of Economics (2008-09 and 2010-11)

- 'Politics of International Economic Relations' (undergraduate option).
- 'International Political Economy' (postgraduate core).
- 'Economic Diplomacy (postgraduate option).
- 'Political Economy of International Trade' (postgraduate option).

University of Oxford (2007-08 and 2009-10)

- 'International Relations' (undergraduate core).
- 'Global Governance' (postgraduate core).
- 'Global Financial Governance' (postgraduate option).
- 'International Relations of the Developing World' (postgraduate option).
- 'Revision and Exam Strategy' (annual postgraduate workshop)

I have performed many other miscellaneous teaching (occasional lectures, seminars, tutorials), from first year undergraduate to postgraduate research. Topics have included US power, populism, and academic professional culture, among others.

I consistently receive high marks and feedback for my teaching from students. In student evaluation assessments, in response to the overall evaluation question 'Would you recommend this module to other students?', I have received the following:

- 'Key Debates on Neoliberalism' (2019-20): 4.1/5.0
- 'Key Debates on Neoliberalism' (2018-19): 4.8/5.0
- 'Politics of the World Economy' (2018-19): 4.5/5.0
- 'Key Debates on Neoliberalism' (2017-18): 4.4/5.0
- 'Politics of the World Economy' (2017-18): 4.7/5.0

Qualitative comments have included:

- 'Matt is an excellent teacher, the best one so far I've had in SOAS'.
- 'Matthew is a fantastic teacher who really manages to capture the class' attention, but also makes political economy not only accessible but also stimulating for someone who has never studied it'.
- 'Matt is patient with students and is passionate about the subjects he teaches. His extra efforts – film screenings, the fieldtrip to the City of London, social drinks – were beyond the average and hugely appreciated'.
